students in the field of mechanical engineering, mechatronics or computer science, but the material could also be useful for programmers and other people interested in or practicing modelling of products or processes.

Modelling in Mechanical Engineering and Mechatronics

Modelling in Mechanical Engineering and Mechatronics considers the viewpoints of many different experts: the modeller, engineer, system architect, software developer, and users of the models and as such will be of interest to all these people. Moreover, it attempts to bridge the gaps between modelling, engineering, computer science, knowledge representation, software engineering, model integration, standardisation and production engineering. The aim is to instruct the reader how to ...
