Story-worlds based on autonomous characters can provide an environment in which users actively participate in the creation of a plot, but this presupposes a level of competence on the part of

Appraisal for a Character-based Story-World

STORYWORLD BUILDER is described. The game enables children to collaboratively build a virtual "story world" and then role-play characters in that world. The educational purpose of the system is to motivate children to write better stories, by providing them with a collaborative, interactive, computer game-like environment in which stories can be enacted. We are interested in whether such a ...

Prototypical narrative representations not only represent a storyworld situated in space and time but also populate that storyworld with characters to whom some kind of mental life can be ascribed. Accordingly, narrative representations across media may employ a number of different strategies to represent the consciousness of characters. Providing some kind of "direct access" may be the ...

Storyworlds across Media: Toward a Media-Conscious

You'll answer all these questions during the brainstorming stage, then move those ideas through the planning stage, where you start to flesh out characters, plot, and your storyworld as you prepare to start writing.

Storyworld First – Build your world

You can use Storyworld as input for a creative workshop. Fill out the worksheet in advance, to provide a structured profile that is relevant to the topic. This offers a useful starting point for a brainstorm on ideas for new solutions. You can also use Storyworld as a workshop activity by filling out the sections of the worksheet together with your team, while going through selected data from ...
